

Uses and Gratification Theory

It was further developed by Katz, Blumler and Gurevitch in the 1970s. According to Katz, Blumler and Gurevitch's research there were some components comprising the Uses and Gratifications Model including active audience, audience initiated media choices and media competing with other sources of satisfaction. They also proposed several needs for media consumption which are classified into following five categories:

1. Cognitive Needs: Media is used by people for acquiring information and knowledge. It is also used to develop better understanding of various concepts and issues, for example people watching documentaries, news analysis reports on current affairs etc.

The Routledge Handbook of Magazine Research David Abrahamson, Marcia R. Prior-Miller, 2015-06-05 Scholarly engagement with the magazine form has in the last two decades produced a substantial amount of valuable research. Authored by leading academic authorities in the study of magazines, the chapters in The Routledge Handbook of Magazine Research not only create an architecture to organize and archive the developing field of magazine research but also suggest new avenues of future investigation. Each of 33 chapters surveys the last 20 years of scholarship in its subject area, identifying the major research themes, theoretical developments, and interpretive breakthroughs. Exploration of the digital challenges and opportunities which currently face the magazine world are woven throughout, offering readers a deeper understanding of the magazine form as well as of the sociocultural realities it both mirrors and influences. The book includes six sections: Methodologies and structures, presents theories and models for magazine research in an evolving global context; Magazine publishing, the people and the work, introduces the roles and practices of those involved in the editorial and business sides of magazine publishing; Magazines as textual communication, surveys the field of contemporary magazines across a range of theoretical perspectives; subjects, genre, and format, questions Magazines as visual communication, explores cover design, photography, illustrations, and interactivity; Pedagogical and curricular perspectives, offers insights on undergraduate and graduate teaching topics in magazine research; The future of the magazine form, speculates on the changing nature of magazine research via its environmental effects, audience, and transforming platforms.

The Social Embeddedness of Media Use Henk Westerik, 2009-05-05 Scholars in the field of communication research have extensively studied television viewing in general and watching television news in particular. The book looks at the subject from an integrative theoretical perspective. Based on Schutzian sociology and action theoretical approaches to media use, the author argues that immediate social influences and other everyday life situations largely determine television use and that the influence of short-term situational characteristics are often overlooked in person-centered explanatory models. In three empirical studies, the role of short-term situations and the influence of immediate social surroundings is analyzed. The use of Discrete Time Event History Analysis is an innovative way to look at household diary data. Findings reveal how family members influence each other in many ways. Watching television turns out to be an integral part of everyday life in the family but also a force that may reduce family interaction. It is shown that television may serve as a surrogate for those family members that are not present and that family members while present at home follow each other's example. Partners are shown to mimic each other, children to mimic their parents, and parents follow the example set by their children. Television news viewing, in contrast to general television viewing, is less determined by the immediate influence of others. Also, the individual motivations for news viewing vary throughout the day. First exposure to television news appears to be motivated by other factors than subsequent exposure. A need for surveillance dominates first exposure but subsequent exposure appears to be governed by other more ritualistic motivations The book is important to scholars graduate level students and practitioners who are concerned with theoretical and methodological insights in the phenomenon of television viewing in everyday life
