This is a search engine in which we first search for the root node, then search for the children of the root node, then search for the children of the children of the root node, and so on. This is the approach used by depth-first programming systems, which are efficient enough and robust enough to be used in practice. Using logic programming combines the good ideas of heuristic search with the forward-programming efficiency of heuristic search. It is also simpler, the search engine does not need to be programmed with rules that define what to search for. It is well suited to get an initial idea of what the search space is, and then to a possibly infinite number of steps.
