

Writing a Descriptive Text

The Structure of a Descriptive Essay

You can use the structure outlined below as a guideline when writing a descriptive essay, consisting of several paragraphs.

PARAGRAPH ONE:

- In your opening sentence, take one of the most obvious features of what you are describing and compare it to something, using one of your senses (perhaps sight). It is useful to use a simile here. Once you have used one simile, rather move onto metaphors and personification. Too many similes can become boring to read.

- In the second sentence, clarify the opening sentence by giving more detail.

- In your third sentence, choose another feature and comment on its distinctive elements. What makes it stand out? If suitable to what you are describing, you could comment on something that evokes a sense of touch. For example, is it smoother than glass; colder than stone; sharper than a thorn; bendy as a snake?

- You may want to elaborate on sentence three, or you may want to move to another feature and focus on hearing, for example.
