The 1998 Environmental Protection Agency
Report to Congress on the State of the Environment
 (Environmental Protection Agency, 1998)
 (EPA, 1998) is a comprehensive report on the state of the environment in the United States.
 The report is organized into four main sections:
 1. Environmental Quality
 2. Environmental Health
 3. Environmental Policy
 4. Environmental Action

- RESEARCH The researchers used a 10-item questionnaire to assess the degree to which respondents agreed or disagreed with the following statements: "I have a good understanding of the company's financial situation," "I have a good understanding of the company's operations," "I have a good understanding of the company's products and services," "I have a good understanding of the company's competitors," "I have a good understanding of the company's customers," "I have a good understanding of the company's employees," "I have a good understanding of the company's management," "I have a good understanding of the company's policies and procedures," "I have a good understanding of the company's history and culture," and "I have a good understanding of the company's future plans." The questionnaire was administered to 100 respondents, and the results were analyzed using a Likert scale.
- RESULTS The results of the study showed that respondents generally agreed with the statements, indicating that they have a good understanding of the company's financial situation, operations, products and services, competitors, customers, employees, management, policies and procedures, history and culture, and future plans. The highest level of agreement was for the statement "I have a good understanding of the company's products and services," while the lowest level of agreement was for the statement "I have a good understanding of the company's future plans."
- CONCLUSIONS The study concluded that respondents have a good understanding of the company's financial situation, operations, products and services, competitors, customers, employees, management, policies and procedures, history and culture, and future plans. This suggests that the company's communication and training efforts are effective in providing employees with a good understanding of the company's financial situation, operations, products and services, competitors, customers, employees, management, policies and procedures, history and culture, and future plans.
