

Sea-Floor Spreading Lab

INTRODUCTION

In the late 1950s, considerable research was conducted to find a means of detecting large steel objects beneath the ocean surface (submarines). As a result, sensitive equipment was constructed that could detect very small changes in the earth's magnetic field - and could be carried in aircraft and used to survey large areas from the air. Surveys of the oceans, and in particular, areas on either side of the mid-ocean ridges, showed patterns of magnetic anomalies that were repeated (mirrored) on either side of the spreading ridge. The patterns were carefully plotted, mapped and analyzed. Scientists suggested that the earth's magnetic field periodically reversed direction (North became south, south became north) over many thousands of years. When the reversal occurred, it did so rapidly. As magma erupted along the divergent plate boundary, magnetic minerals within the cooling lava became aligned with the earth's magnetic field at the time of cooling. When the lava solidified, the pattern of magnetic alignment was locked into the rock. When the magnetic field changed direction again, the rock alignment remained as a record of the earth's magnetism at the time of cooling. Careful measurements showed that the patterns of North and South alignment matched exactly on either side of the spreading ridge as seen on the right. Additionally, it was noted that the ages of the rocks increased as distance from the ridge increased. New crust is being created along the divergent plate boundaries and forcing the older crust towards the coastlines. The observation of the oldest crust being far from the boundary and the newest crust being right along it supports the idea that the plates are diverging. These two pieces of evidence support the theory of sea-floor spreading.

PROCEDURE

As a class, we will create a model of the Mid-Atlantic Ridge. This model will demonstrate the motion of the plates at a divergent plate boundary as well as how the age of the sea-floor increases as you approach the coastlines. You will also observe the mirror image of magnetic polarity recorded in the rocks on either side of the ridge. Please refer to this demonstration and
