

Writing an Essay

A good essay has a carefully considered structure. Every paragraph should be relevant to the title of the essay.

Make a Plan

- Read the question a number of times to ensure that you understand exactly what is being asked.
- Your plan should show how you are going to break down your main points.
- Use key words and subject specific vocabulary within your plan.
- Your plan can be written as a mind map.

Introduction - This should relate closely to the topic of the essay.

- Keep this paragraph simple and to the point. Avoid giving too much detail.
- Give the reader an overview of your essay, outlining the points you are going to make in order of importance.
- Set the tone of work by describing the subject, issue or problem.

The Main Body - Present your thoughts and evidence.

- Present your points in the same order as your introduction.
- Make sure that each paragraph links to the previous one through the use of connectives (linking words) for example; so, secondly, however.
- Use evidence to back up your arguments.

Conclusion - Bring the essay to a logical and satisfying end.

- Reiterate the main points of your essay. Make this section short.

Bibliography

- You may be asked to include a bibliography. This is a list of any sources/texts you have used to help you write your essay.
