The end of Reconstruction

Reconstruction, the tumultuous period following the American Civil War, came to an end in 1877. This period was marked by efforts to rebuild the South, reintegrate the Confederate states back into the Union, and establish and protect rights for newly freed African Americans. However, these efforts were not without significant challenges, and the Reconstruction era ended a long time for many ways.

The catalyst for the end of Reconstruction was the Compromise of 1877. As part of this agreement, Democrats conceded the presidency to Republicans in return, Republicans agreed to remove federal troops from the South. The removal of these troops had been a key factor in ensuring the gains made by African Americans during Reconstruction. With their removal, Southern states were free to act without much federal interference.
