The Special Support Service for Former Sawmill Workers Exposed to PCP – General information for doctors

The Special Support Service for Former Sawmill Workers Exposed to PCP (the Sawmill Workers Service) is for former sawmill workers who were exposed to polychlorinated biphenyls (PCB) and other hazardous substances at sawmills throughout New Zealand from the 1930s to the 1980s. The Sawmill Workers Service aims to help people stay healthy by supporting the early detection of diseases, promoting healthy lifestyles and reducing modifiable risk factors.

What is the Special Support Service for Former Sawmill Workers Exposed to PCP?

The Sawmill Workers Service is based on a free annual health check delivered by a primary health care team in a general practice setting. It includes referrals to other publicly funded services depending on patients' health needs – like referral to smoking cessation programmes, physical activity programmes, nutrition advice, mental health services, and genetic counselling.

Do I have to determine my patient's eligibility for the Service?

No. Eligibility is based on whether the patient worked in a sawmill that used PCP, how long they worked at a sawmill and whether they are entitled to publicly funded health services in New Zealand. An individual's eligibility will be determined following an application to the Ministry of Health. An appeals process is available for unsuccessful applicants.

How will I know if one of my patients is eligible for the Service?

Applicants must provide the name of their general practitioner, family doctor, or medical centre with their application. The nominated practitioner of successful applicants will then be informed by writing by the Support Service National Secretariat that the patient is eligible for the Sawmill Workers Service. Following this, the nominated practitioner will be given information about the Sawmill Workers Service and specific tools (guidance material, patient questionnaire) for use in undertaking the health check.

Specific questions about the annual health check

What is the free annual health check?

Eligible individuals are entitled to a free annual health check. The content of each check depends on the patient's medical history, current health needs, and the clinical decisions made by the primary health care team. The free health check generally involves:

- talking about PCP and dioxin exposure, its health effects and the patient's exposure
- talking about the patient's health and providing brief advice on staying healthy
- considering whether the patient has any symptoms associated with PCP or dioxin exposure and completing a physical examination if necessary
- discussing any mental health concerns the patient may have
- considering whether to refer the patient to Green Prescription programmes, nutrition services, smoking cessation, mental health or genetic counselling.

Will the first health check be the same as subsequent annual checks?

The content of each health check depends on the health needs of the individual, good clinical practice, and the clinical judgement of the primary health care team. Some patients will receive similar checks each year while others will get different checks.
