Poverty Porn

by Maria Juliana Basuil

October 1, 2021

Poverty porn is a strategy implemented by nonprofits and charities to elicit sympathy and funds from donors by displaying exploitative photos of people living in poverty. Poverty porn was first popularized in the 1980s, during the "golden age of charity campaigns." During this time, charity campaigns used graphic images such as starving children with flies in their eyes. This immediately became a trend, with significant efforts such as Live Aid. While some of these initiatives were successful in garnering funds for charity, some commentators criticized the strategy, alleging it oversimplified chronic poverty; this apparent sensationalism was called "poverty porn" by critics.

Even being a citizen who belongs to a third world country, I am not in favor in poverty porn. It is undeniable that many people around the world especially undeveloped countries is experiencing poverty. Although for some it doesn't necessarily representing the status of the whole country. Each person or a citizen plays a vital role on how he/she will succeed in different aspect of life. From Education to employment or whatever career they wanted to achieve. And the government of course must be there to guide the people, lend a helping hand for them to become a productive citizen. Good governance of the leaders that was chosen by the people is needed to help fight poverty. Therefore, citizens and government leaders must have a good interaction to its people. Both has a responsibility to overcome poverty.

I strongly disagree about poverty porn because the majority of the people behind this whether it's from government or private individuals their aim is selfish, it is solely their personal gain or benefit, featuring the poor housing community, scarcity of food to people, homeless people, etc. Exposing the worst scenarios that was filtered just to succeed in their own interest. They are using poor people, poor children by the images they have shown or filmed in the TV screens and write ups of newspapers and also social medias. They sell those and they will benefit from it but in the end, those helpless people whom
