

Bullying's Role In The Columbine Killings

After watching the documentary, it becomes clear that bullying played a major role in these killings. Another factor was the mental state of these two individuals who both were diagnosed, treated, and prescribed medication for psychiatric reasons, which were documented in the film by Steven E. Pitt a psychiatrist whom stated both Dylan and Eric did have a mood and psychiatric disorder Eric prominent anger Dylan depression (class film). There is an immense lack of empathy, remorse, sympathy. There are irrational motives behind these murders and unjustifiable behavior that cannot be explained with logical reasoning bullying along with depression was something these individuals struggled with. They both had little contact with the outside world their inner circle was comprised of each other there was no room for any outside positive influences. Based on the evidence in the film I believe there was a combination of factors which attributed to these killings. The school failed to stop bullying and did not recognize the warning signs these students presented prior to this tragedy taking place. Dietz's hypotheses are resentment brewed anger, sadness rooted depression (Class film). This explains some of the external and internal behaviors that... Show more content on Helpwriting.net...

The Columbine shootings occurred because two individuals who were mentally unstable and were prone to committing acts of violence had access to weapons. In addition to this the staff and parents did not report any suspicious behavior that was seen prior these crimes. The combination of social, psychological, and anger problems triggered a violent and deadly response. This could have been preventable if the initial warning signs were taken seriously. The video essay trench coat mafia should of lead to psychological evaluation that questioned and analyzed the mentality and perception of Eric and
