Tuning WebLogic Server

Setting Performance-Related config.xml Parameters

The WebLogic Server configuration file (`config.xml`) contains a number of performance-related parameters that can be fine-tuned depending on your environment and applications. The `config.xml` file, located on the machine that hosts the Administration Server, provides persistent storage of MBean attribute values. Every time you change an attribute using the system administration tools (using either the command-line interface or the Administration Console), its value is stored in the appropriate administration MBean and written to the `config.xml` file. Each WebLogic Server domain has its own `config.xml` file.

For more information about using WebLogic Server system administration tools, see the "System Administration Tools" section in the Administration Guide.

Table 3-1 lists the `config.xml` file parameters that affect server performance.

Table 3-1 Performance-Related config.xml Elements

Element	Attributes	For information
<code>Server</code>	<code>MaxTimeOutSeconds</code>	See Using WebLogic Server Performance Packs .
<code>ExecutionQueue</code>	<code>ThreadCount</code>	See Setting Thread Count .
<code>ExecuteQueue</code>	<code>QueueLength</code> <code>QueueLengthThreshold</code> <code>OverflowAction</code> <code>ThreadCount</code> <code>ThreadCountLimit</code>	See Tuning Execute Queues for Overflow Conditions .
<code>Server</code>	<code>StackOverflowAction</code> <code>StackOverflowThreshold</code>	See Detecting "Stuck" Threads .
