Set Worksheet 3: Interactions

1. Explain what is meant by the term interaction.

An interaction is a situation in which the effect of one factor on the response variable is not the same for all levels of the other factor. For example, if the effect of a treatment on the response variable is different for different levels of a second factor, then there is an interaction between the two factors. In this case, the effect of the treatment on the response variable is not the same for all levels of the second factor. This is often the case when the two factors are interdependent, meaning that the effect of one factor on the response variable is not the same for all levels of the other factor.

2. What is the difference between a main effect and an interaction effect? Give an example of each.

A main effect is the effect of one factor on the response variable, averaged across all levels of the other factor. For example, if the effect of a treatment on the response variable is the same for all levels of a second factor, then there is a main effect of the treatment. An interaction effect is the effect of one factor on the response variable, which is different for different levels of the other factor. For example, if the effect of a treatment on the response variable is different for different levels of a second factor, then there is an interaction effect.

3. Explain the difference between a simple effect and a main effect.

A simple effect is the effect of one factor on the response variable, for a specific level of the other factor.

4. What is the difference between a simple effect and a main effect? Give an example of each.

5. What is the difference between a simple effect and a main effect? Give an example of each.

6. What is the difference between a simple effect and a main effect? Give an example of each.
