

Organisational Structure Dimensions

Centralisation

What does this mean?

- a) Explain what it means for a business that is highly centralised.

The centralisation of a business means that most of the decision making power lies with the top management. This means that there is less delegation of power, and that lower level managers will have less autonomy over their own areas of responsibility.

- b) State three reasons why a highly centralised business may be disadvantageous.

Centralisation of a business can be disadvantageous because it can lead to less autonomy for managers. This means that the lower level managers have less power to make decisions and plan for their own areas of responsibility without being monitored by the top management.

- c) Give three other centralisation characteristics.

Other characteristics of a highly centralised business include the reporting back of decisions made at lower levels to the top management. This means that the lower level managers have less autonomy over their own areas of responsibility without being monitored by the top management.

- d) Explain what it means for a business to be de-centralised.

A de-centralised business means that the decision making power is shared across the business with lower level managers having more autonomy over their own areas.

- e) Define de-centralised businesses. Give one example from the business environment.

A de-centralised business has the advantage that it can easily reduce the influence of the top management and that lower level managers have more autonomy over their own areas.

- f) Give reasons why a business might want to move away from a highly centralised structure to a de-centralised structure. (You must explain how this would give lower level managers more autonomy over their own areas of responsibility.)

Autonomy of the Business Department

- g) Define autonomy concerning business departments.

Autonomy of business departments is when business units receive significant autonomy to act and to make decisions independently of the rest of the business. It means delegating as much authority as possible to business units so that they can make decisions independently of the rest of the business.

- h) Explain three ways that the autonomy of business units can be increased. Explain how this is beneficial.

Three ways of increasing the autonomy of business units are delegating decision making power to lower level managers, giving them more authority to make decisions independently of the rest of the business, and giving them more autonomy over their own areas of responsibility. This means that the lower level managers have more power to make decisions independently of the rest of the business.
