Nonprofit seeks millions for youths

Charter proposal would set aside a portion of city's revenue growth

By Molly Smith
STAFF WRITER

A San Antonio education nonprofit wants to make a major addition to the city charter: a clause that devotes 5% of annual city revenue growth to children and youth.

Such a change would result in millions of dollars annually for the organization and programs that serve San Antonio's youth, from birth to age 24.

This evening, UP Partnership CEO Ryan Lagattolero will pitch the idea to the Charter Review Commission, which has been working since late last year to analyze a handful of possible amendments to the charter. Those include striking a pay restriction and term limit on the city manager.

The "single technical issue" the commission has been tackling "relates to San Antonio having the best, highest-quality talent that we possibly can," Lagattolero said, "and our proposal would expand their scope so that San Antonians from every district in our city can have the best chance at becoming the highest-quality talent that they can."

That is, Mayor Ron Nirenberg, who hand-picked the commission at members' behest, has directed all business of focus.

This evening will be the first time the commission gets to directly hear from residents — who ultimately will vote on any amendments to the charter in the November election. It will be the commission's sixth meeting and the first to include a public-comment portion.

Though residents can give feedback on the issues covered by the mayor's change, some see it as an opportunity to sway the commission to take up their district's changes.

The charter can be amended only every two years.

GARDEN RIDGE — As she rides down FM 2023, Lisa Seibel gestures out the window to the wall of dirt, rock and debris piled high beside the road.

"It's starting to be kind of the Reddilling Rock of Garden Ridge," said Seibel, a City Council member in the Council County town of about 4,000 people.

The town marks the edge of the Reddilling Materials Service Quarry, where the Gannett-based company is mining more than 1,000 acres for the construction materials needed to keep up with

Most of NEISD's candidates decry partisan politics

By Melissa Marano

Most of the candidates vying for seats on the North East Independent School District Board of Trustees on one thing: Partisan politics shouldn't distract, govern or obstruct the district's decisions.

Signs of Sugar Land's boom are visible just beyond the intersection of U.S. 90 and Texas 6.

Subdivisions have sprung up like spiders webs around Constellation Field, the 500-million-dollar home of the Astros Triple-A affiliate. On the other side of Cypress Creek, plans are under way to redevelop the former Constellation field into the country's oldest ballpark.

Primary that gave the city its name, and now it's a key to housing, retail and offices.

But with growth has come increased attention from lawmakers, and the area, in part, has become an incubator of how redistricting has been a matter of Texas as rapidly expanding suburbs in a state of political change.
