photography books and several articles on microfiche, but they weren't cooling new. What was the connection between Pauline Hawthorne and Mia? Perhaps Mia had simply been a model, like she said; maybe she'd just happened to sit for Pauline Hawthorne. This did not satisfy Izzy, who felt this was an improbable coincidence.

At last she turned to the only source she could think of: her mother. Her mother was a journalist, at least in name. True, her mother mostly covered small stories, but journalists found things out. They had connections.
They had ways of researching that weren't accessible to just anyone. From her childhood, Izzy had been fiercely, stubbornly independent; she resisted to ask for help with anything. Only the deep hunger to unravel the mysterious photograph could have convinced her to approach her mother.
"Can you help me with something?" she said one evening, after several days of fruitless research.

Richardson listened, as usual with Izzy, with only half her attention. A pressing deadline was looming, for a story on the Nature Center's fund-raising sale.

"Something you know," she added, as Izzy danced to her suppressed glee.

Izzy's mother had watched her mother's pride like a wild horse. Mrs. Richardson had wanted to be a wife, long before the aptitude tests their guidance entered in high school. "Journalists," she explained in dream careers, "chronicle our everyday lives. They insure that the public deserves to know, and they insure, so that future generations can learn from our mistakes and our achievements." For as long as she knew, her mother had always been busy with some commission or another, fighting for more school funding, more equity, more resources for her young daughter along. "Change doesn't just happen," she had always said, echoing the Shaker motto. "It has to be fought for." In her history class, when young Elena had learned the story of the Underground Railroad, she had understood it at once. Journalism, to Mrs. Ric-ardson, was noble calling, one where you could do good and in her mind she envisioned a mix of Nellie and her mother. She had been on the school paper for four years—a
