Thirty-two years ago while browsing in my high school library, I happened upon an intriguingly titled expository book. I knew astonishingly little of the practice of mathematics at the time. I was aware that geometry derived from Thales, Pythagoras, and Euclid. Whether or not any geometric theorems were discovered after Euclid I could not say. That algebra and trigonometry were the results of conscious development would no more have occurred to me than the idea that the English language was the creation of dedicated professional linguists. I knew the names and work of many scientists—Copernicus, Kepler, and Galileo in astronomy; Darwin, Mendel, and Pasteur in biology; Boyle, Lavoisier, and Curie in chemistry; Archimedes, Newton, and Einstein in physics; Jenner, Harvey, and Koch in medicine; and many others, none of whom were mathematicians. Although my recreational reading of Hall and Knight had exposed me to an odd assortment of surnames, such as Venn and Horner, I knew of no first-rate scientist in the field of mathematics. Indeed, I did not really know that there was such a field.

had a more pressing need. For less than nine dollars What Is Mathematics? by Richard Courant and Herbert Robbins became the first volume in my collection of mathematics books.

Only a sketchy summary of this well-known text need be given here. The first chapter is largely devoted to number theory. A chapter on real and complex numbers follows. The discussion includes Dedekind cuts, Cantor's theory of cardinal numbers, and Liouville's construction of transcendental numbers. The third chapter is concerned with field extensions and geometric constructions. It includes a thorough investigation of the impossible straight-edge-and-compass constructions of classical Greek geometry (stopping short of a proof of Lindemann's Theorem). Chapters on projective geometry and topology come next. In preparation for the remainder of the book, Courant and Robbins continue

The book I pulled off the shelf that day did more than open my eyes; it changed my life. I graduated from high school later that year, armed with a twenty-dollar book certificate. It might have been prudent to save my award for the college textbooks that I would soon require. However, with no further access to my school library, I
