Abstract The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week, low-intensity, supervised exercise program on the physical and psychological health of older adults with mild cognitive impairment (MCI). The study was a randomized, controlled trial with 20 participants in the exercise group and 20 in the control group. The exercise group performed a 12-week, low-intensity, supervised exercise program. The control group did not exercise. The study was conducted in a community center. The primary outcome was the change in the Mini-Mental State Examination (MMSE) score. The secondary outcomes were the change in the Beck Depression Inventory (BDI) score, the change in the Physical Functioning (PF) score, and the change in the Quality of Life (QoL) score. The results showed that the exercise group had a significantly greater improvement in the MMSE score, the BDI score, the PF score, and the QoL score compared to the control group. The exercise program was well tolerated and had no adverse effects. The study suggests that a 12-week, low-intensity, supervised exercise program can improve the physical and psychological health of older adults with MCI.

Abstract — The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week training program on the cardiovascular and muscular endurance of 10-year-old children. The study was conducted in a primary school in the city of Ankara, Turkey. The children were divided into two groups: a control group and an experimental group. The experimental group participated in a 12-week training program that included aerobic and strength training exercises. The control group did not participate in any training program. The study found that the experimental group showed significant improvements in cardiovascular and muscular endurance compared to the control group. The results suggest that a 12-week training program can effectively improve the physical fitness of 10-year-old children.
