

There are many various factors that have shaped the modern Olympic movement from 1892 to 2002. The original goal was to create an international community through sports competition. Much like the Ancient games between Greek city-states, the games were made to promote unity. However, as time passed many worldwide events such as the Cold War and women suffrage altered the goals of the Olympics. Political views and movement began to shape the Olympics. In addition, economic gains and pursuits became an important aspect of the Olympics. The participation of nations during the 20th Century involved nationalism as well as social, political and economic reasons for forming and participating in the Olympics.

- Includes time period (as time passed is always good – shows understanding of change)
- Answers the question (about factors)
- Includes groups
- Groups are there, but hints are all over the place (don't count the whole paragraph as a thesis, must be tighter); putting "nationalism" in the last sentence was important (something specific) and allowed the last sentence to be counted as a thesis; without "nationalism" it would not have counted.
