① Check wireless link between computer and Access Point.

Under the "Status" tab in Wireless Panel, is the Network Name shown as "Not Connected"? →

- Check status
If any connection is established with a wireless computer (or WEP key), the icon in the system tray may not indicate "Connected". All connections to Access Point are established successfully and displayed with "Connected" in the status bar. The connection will be completed with the "Not Connected" icon will be shown in the system tray.
• If the Wireless Panel shows "Status" that reads the "Status" tab reads "Not Connected" or "Not Connected", there may be a network problem that computer settings. Confirm the settings as described below. If the IP address does not start with "192.168. ..." and is not "0.0.0.0", there may be a problem with the settings for the wireless link between the computer and the Access Point. In such a case, refer to the manual of the Access Point for details.
• Check the data encryption (WEP) setting at the Access Point to which you want to connect.
• Click the "Network List" tab in the Wireless Panel.
• Modify the settings for the network shown as "Not Connected", and reconnect.
→ Windows XP, Windows 2000

The "Configuring Network" dialog box appears.

Change the settings according to the settings in the Access Point and click "Next".

• Check status
If you can display the "Configuring Network" dialog box by selecting "Setup Network" in the "Setting" tab, it may show "Not Connected". After the connection is established, the status bar changes settings.

The computer connects to the Access Point with the next settings.

- Windows XP
To enter Windows (TM) XP the setting is made in the "Configuring Network" dialog box. For details, refer to the "Configuring Network".
- Click the "Status" tab in the Wireless Panel and verify that the IP address does not start with "192.168. ..." and is not "0.0.0.0".
The connection between computer and Access Point should now be correct.
- Check status
When settings are set, check that the computer only after the connection between computer and Access Point has been established properly. If unable to connect to the Internet, perform the above steps first, to ensure that communication between computer and Access Point functions correctly.
- Network Name indication does not show "Not Connected", but IP address starts with "192.168. ..." or is "0.0.0.0"
There may be a problem with the data encryption settings. If connection to the Access Point for which data encryption is enabled has attempted but failed, a warning message may be displayed. In this case, make the "Status" tab in the Wireless Panel for the correct connection to act as a network bridge. Access Point IP address should be changed (the IP address is shown as "192.168. ..." or "0.0.0.0"). Enter the correct encryption key (WEP key) as described in ② above, and reconnect.

② Is the wireless link set up to act as a network bridge? (Windows XP only)

- Click "Start", point to "Connect To", and click "Show all connections".
- Confirm that the wireless network connection in question is not acting as a network bridge.
- If the wireless network connection is configured as a network bridge, right-click the corresponding icon, and click "Remove".

③ Check wireless link between Access Point and Internet Service Provider (ISP).

Refer to connection information provided by your ISP to configure the Access Point. For details, contact technical support of the ISP. They may not provide any support regarding this issue.

① The "AP Setting" button under the "Status" tab of the Wireless Panel can only be used in conjunction with the Access Point PCWA-A300 (as of February, 2003).

② Even when using the Access Point PCWA-A300, clicking the "AP Setting" button results in the message "There was the response from that access point. Possible reasons include: the access point is located too far away; the access point may not be configured to respond; the access point may be turned off." In such a case, communication may be unstable. Check whether the distance between computer and Access Point is appropriate, and refer to them as any obstacles that may impair signal reception. Also make sure that the computer and Access Point are in the same power supply.

③ When using Windows XP, opening the Access Point home page (setup page) may not be available if the Internet Connection Firewall function has been enabled.

- Click "Start", point to "Connect To", and click "Show all connections".
- Right-click the Wireless Network Connection icon to which you want to connect, and click "Properties".
- Click the "Advanced" tab and (if selected) check the "Protect my computer and network by limiting or preventing access to this computer from the Internet" check box.
- Click "OK".
