Recent census estimates show that more than 100 million Americans use "PlayStation" video games. The most popular titles are sports and action games, such as NBA 2K10, Call of Duty: Modern Warfare 2, and Grand Theft Auto V. These games are often rated "M" for Mature, meaning they are suitable for ages 17 and older. However, many parents are concerned about the impact of violent video games on their children. Some studies suggest that playing violent games can lead to increased aggression and desensitization to violence. Others argue that video games can be a valuable tool for teaching problem-solving and strategic thinking. The debate continues, with more research needed to fully understand the effects of video games on children and adolescents.
