

Research Paper Outlining

Now that you have taken notes on numerous sources and developed a thesis, begin to organize your ideas into an outline. Making an outline is crucial to staying organized.

1. List the paper's main points and supporting details in your own words. Also list which sources and concepts will back up your main ideas.
 - For each source, write key quotations, summaries, or paraphrases from your notes, so are beginning to integrate your notes and sources.
 - Remember, your ideas drive your paper. Do not organize it source by source.
 - Writing topic sentences (see below) is a recommended strategy for outlining your paper. You may need multiple paragraphs to fully flesh out a main idea.
 - Ask a tutor about Inspiration software to help outline your paper.
 - See the sample outline. →
2. Topic Sentences and Supporting Sentences

A topic sentence is written in your own words and should not be a quotation. The rest of the paragraph consists of supporting sentences that develop the topic sentence. All details in a paragraph must be closely connected to the topic sentence and further develop that topic sentence. When you begin to discuss a new idea, start a new paragraph with a new topic sentence. *

What are the purposes of a topic sentence?

- Conveys a paragraph's main point
- Connects back to the thesis
- Establishes organization

What are the purposes of supporting sentences?

- Must relate to and develop the topic sentence
- Consist of:
 1. Summaries, paraphrases, and quotations from sources
 2. Your explanation of this material

Hint: Use your notes as the basis of your writing.

- Supporting sentences take the form of:
 - Facts
 - Statistics
 - Examples
 - Expert opinions
 - Your explanations and analysis of material from your sources
- Paragraph Length: A well-developed paragraph must include sufficient supporting details to develop the topic sentence. A well-developed paragraph is usually 6-10 sentences. This length will vary.
