

HOW TO CREATE A SUMMARY OUTLINE

Source: <https://classroom.synonym.com/create-summary-outline-8573413.html>

Sometimes when you read, an overload of information gets tangled in your mind. You might remember what the topic of the report was, but if you can't remember what came where and for what purpose, it doesn't do much good. In situations like these, making a summary outline can be a lifesaver. A summary outline is an efficient way to familiarize yourself with a paper's primary purpose and flow and organize all its relevant information in a clear, logical format, so it's there at a glance anytime you need it. The time and frustration it saves make it invaluable.

1. Read the material

Read the material to be outlined as many times as necessary until you really understand it.

2. Break

Break the material down into its essential components and give each part a Roman numeral. If you are summarizing a research paper, find background, arguments, and findings. If a literary work, make Roman numerals for author, genre, historical context, and content.

3. Make subheadings

Make subheadings for the most essential points within the broad categories with Latin/English letters. For example, if Roman numeral I. is "Purpose," A and B could be the expressly stated objectives of the report. If you have an "A," you must have a "B." This is true only of "A" and "B;" a "C" does not need a "D." If there is no "B" for a Roman numeral, skip this step.

4. Summarize information

Summarize information pertinent to each subheading using bullet points. If "I." is "Purpose" and "A" is "To find microorganisms in pond water," bullet points might summarize hypotheses and methods used to conduct research. If "I." is "Genre" and "A." is "Detective Fiction," bullet points might summarize trends in detective fiction at the time.

5. Continue this process

Continue this process until every relevant point in the document is summarized in a clear, concise way.
