Title: Petroleum Works – Refineries
Issued by: Environment Department

1.0 Introduction

The petroleum industry covers a very wide range of operations from simple primary separations to complex petrochemical products. This note covers only refining separation processes, which can again be simple primary distillations or complex secondary treatments such as catalytic cracking, hydrogenation, alkylation units and vacuum distillation, etc.

These notes apply to works in which:

- Crude or stabilized crude petroleum or associated gas, or condensate handled, stored or refined; or
- Any product of such refining is subjected to further refining or to conversion; or
- Natural gas is refined or odorized; or
- Used lubricating oil is prepared for reuse by any thermal process.

These notes are intended to provide a basis for consultation between works managements and the Authority so that the latter can take into account the types of plant and their capacities when deciding on requirements, leaving flexibility to make allowances for special local circumstances.

An industrial accident involving a refinery happened at the Texas City Refinery. On 23 March 2005, an explosion occurred at a petroleum refinery in Texas City, Texas, that belonged to British Petroleum. It is the third largest refinery in the United States and one of the largest in the world, processing 433,000 barrels of crude oil per day and accounting for 3% of that nation's gasoline supply. Over 100 were injured, and 15 were confirmed dead, including employees of the Fluor Corporation as well as British Petroleum. British Petroleum has since accepted that its employees contributed to the accident. Several level indicators failed, leading to overfilling of a knock out drum, and light hydrocarbons concentrated at ground level throughout the area. A running diesel truck nearby set off the explosion.

PCFC has published a Health and Safety Manual dealing with requirements for the protection of employees and neighbors from risks of injury, health, fire and electricity hazards, and this should be studied in conjunction with these notes.

The health, safety and environmental problems of the petroleum industry are many and varied and long experience has brought solutions for the design, construction, operation and standardization of refineries to make them acceptable. Such requirements and standards are embodied in national and international agreements with organizations such as the American National Fire Protection Association (NEPA), the American Petroleum Institute (API), and Stitching CONCAWE of Western Europe. All new refineries are required to design and plan their equipment to those standards.
