

Reflective Thinking Through Teacher Journal Writing: Myths and Realities

Belinda Ho and Jack C. Richards

Abstract

Journal writing is a common practice in teacher education programmes, and is often used to promote critical reflectivity. This study sought to investigate in what ways journal writing promotes reflective thinking. The study focussed on ten teachers enrolled in an in-service TESOL teacher education programme at a tertiary institution in Hong Kong. The study examined (1) what the teachers chose to write about; (2) whether their writing could be described as critically reflective; (3) whether the journal writing experience developed the teachers' sense of critical reflectivity over time. The teachers' journal entries were studied and coded according to the topics they wrote about, and these served as a measure of critical reflectivity. Earlier and later journal entries were compared to check evidence of change. Results show that (1) the teachers mainly wrote about problems faced in their teaching and described the approaches and procedures they used; (2) some teachers appear to be more reflective in their orientation to teaching than others; (3) there was little change in the degree of critical reflectivity that the teachers engaged in over time. Implications for the use of journal writing as a means to promote critical reflection in a TESOL teacher education programme are discussed.

Introduction

The goal of many in-service teacher education programmes is to engage teachers in a process of critical reflection upon their current teaching beliefs and practices. The notion of 'reflective teaching', which is a dominant paradigm in teacher education programmes around the world including ESL teacher education programmes, seeks to develop teachers who are willing and able to reflect on the origins and consequences of their actions, as well as the material and ideological constraints and encouragements embedded in the classroom, school, and societal contexts in which they live. These goals are directed towards enabling teachers to develop pedagogical habits and skills necessary for self-directed growth and towards preparing them, individually and collectively to participate as full partners in their making of educational policies. (Zeichner and Liston 1986: 4)

A variety of approaches are currently used to help teachers develop a critically reflective approach to their teaching, including action research, ethnography, and journal writing (Zeichner 1987; Calderhead 1989). Journal writing is seen as an opportunity for teachers to use the process of writing to describe and explore their own teaching practices. A variety of claims are made concerning the benefits of journals in teacher education. Brock, Yu and Wong (1992: 295) summarize these as:

- They provide an effective means of identifying variables that are important to individual teachers and learners.
- They serve as a means of generating questions and hypotheses about teaching and learning processes.
