Student - Color Vision

Color Vision

The purpose of this lab is to explore the way we see colors and the way the brain processes the information it receives from the eyes. The lab is divided into two parts: a theoretical part and a practical part. The theoretical part discusses the basic principles of color vision, and the practical part uses the PhET Color Vision simulation to explore color vision deficiencies.

Additive Color Mixing

Additive color mixing is the process of combining different colors of light to create new colors. This process is based on the fact that the human eye has three types of color receptors: red, green, and blue. When these receptors are stimulated by different colors of light, they send signals to the brain, which then interprets the signals as a specific color.

Subtractive Color Mixing

Subtractive color mixing is the process of combining different colors of paint or ink to create new colors. This process is based on the fact that different colors of paint or ink absorb different wavelengths of light. When these colors are mixed together, they absorb more wavelengths of light, resulting in a darker color.

© 2009 University of Utah

Example 1: A red light source and a green light source are combined. The resulting color is yellow. This is because the red light source emits light with a wavelength of approximately 650 nm, and the green light source emits light with a wavelength of approximately 530 nm. When these two colors are combined, the resulting light has a wavelength of approximately 580 nm, which is perceived as yellow.

$R + G = \text{Yellow Light}$

Example 2: A red light source and a blue light source are combined. The resulting color is magenta. This is because the red light source emits light with a wavelength of approximately 650 nm, and the blue light source emits light with a wavelength of approximately 450 nm. When these two colors are combined, the resulting light has a wavelength of approximately 550 nm, which is perceived as magenta.

$R + B = \text{Magenta Light}$

Example 3: A green light source and a blue light source are combined. The resulting color is cyan. This is because the green light source emits light with a wavelength of approximately 530 nm, and the blue light source emits light with a wavelength of approximately 450 nm. When these two colors are combined, the resulting light has a wavelength of approximately 490 nm, which is perceived as cyan.

$G + B = \text{Cyan Light}$

Conclusion:

Color vision is a complex process that involves the eye and brain. Understanding color vision and its deficiencies is important for many reasons, including medical diagnosis and daily life. The PhET Color Vision simulation is a valuable tool for exploring color vision and its deficiencies.
