When working operation of the variable valve is required, the variable valve is shown in the working position. The variable valve is shown in the working position.

On tractors with the variable displacement (VLD) hydraulic pump, the variable valve is shown in the neutral position. The variable valve is shown in the neutral position.

When the variable valve is in neutral, the control valve spool is held in the neutral position by the return spring and passage 10 is blocked by the control valve spool.

The control valve spool also holds 10 off and stop part of the supply passage 11 and return at passage 12 and 13. The oil in both ends of the 10 cylinder is, therefore, trapped.

When the valve is in neutral, passage 10 and 11 connect to the return at passage 12 and 13 allowing pressure in the main working line from the valve to return to tank.

On tractors with variable displacement hydraulic pump, the control valve spool is in the off, against the spring, position of flow from the pump back to tank through the pressure valve assembly.
