How to get the best results

Arthropods are classified in the phylum Arthropoda, which are the segmented worms. Each arthropod has about 100 joint segments, supported by sclera. Each segment has muscles that help the worm move and adapt, or breathe, in the outside of the body. These arms help to anchor the worm in the soil, making movement easier.

The earthworm's digestive system contains many sections, each with a specific function. These sections are designed to work together to digest the soil that the earthworm eats. Animals are more complex than other worms because they have a 3-way digestive tract with a mouth at one end and an anus at the other.

The earthworm's blood is contained in blood vessels, which is known as a closed-circulatory system. Its earthy surface is like a pump that pumps blood throughout the body. There are 2 blood vessels (arterial and venous) that run the length of the worm, providing oxygen to all the cells in its body.

The northwestern's value is its primary degree of insulation. It does not have lungs, but uses cutaneous breathing, as oxygen and moisture diffuse directly. Although it also has an extensive vascular system (like ours) and it breathes, it does lack the ability to store blood. This allows the alligator to stay in the dark, moist and warm. It can absorb oxygen, instead of breathing into the lungs, rather than driving out.

Earthworms are hermaphrodites, meaning that they only have male AND female sex organs. They still, however need a mate to reproduce. Two earthworms will line up and exchange sperm through an opening. The sperm that forms a tiny tube. The earthworm slides out of the other's tail and as it slides out, it passes out the egg masses and they are fertilized by the newly collected sperm. The children eventually grow completely off the worm and become an egg mass that becomes new worms.
